

Assistant Domain Leader:
Languages@NDC

things you didn't know about...

Jenna Lo Bianco

- 1 She has taught at both the St. Paul's and Notre Dame campuses of Emmanuel College
- 2 She has over 200 cookbooks in her home library.
- 3 She is the Vice President of the Victorian Association of Teachers of Italian.
- 4 She is a published author.
- 5 She has visited 37 countries, and would love to visit Canada next.
- 6 She is petrified of heights!

I grew up in Melbourne's south-eastern suburbs among the possums and rosellas. I was raised in a bilingual household, speaking both Italian and English, and I have a younger brother. Now married, I live in the western suburbs with my husband, who is also a teacher. In my spare time, I love to cook and read, and I enjoy catching up with family and friends.

I loved school as a student and knew that my future career would be in the field of education. In 2013 my husband and I travelled to England to teach overseas for 12 months, which was both a rewarding and enjoyable experience! I really love to travel and learn about other cultures. Learning about local food and language is what I most look forward to.

I am very passionate about languages education, and am currently studying a PhD in Education at Monash University. Ok, so I guess I am a big grammar nerd, but it's important to do what you love AND love what you do. I am lucky enough to be able to do both at Emmanuel.

LIFE TO THE FULL

Emmanuel College